FSM CONCORD

In the past, I have expressed concerns regarding repetitive and numerous amendments of appropriation for public projects and social programs similar to those listed above. The numerous amendments clearly reflect hasty and ambiguous planning, and absence of clearly defined objectives. The amendments of public projects are repetitious in nature. In most cases, they involve shifting around small amounts of leftover funds to support existing or new projects. The process is administratively tedious, costly and a waste of time. By the time the administrative paper works are completed, the needs of the recipients would have changed as well, thus, the amendments become ineffectual.

It is time to seriously reassess our national policy on public projects and social programs. Considering our bleak financial outlook, it is crucial that public projects are planned in a way that will bring about meaningful impact on livelihood and economic condition of people on the streets. Furthermore, transparency requires that certain criteria must be developed that will guide in the implementation of projects and related programs. For this reason, I continue to express concern with regard to the absence of public hearing or executive views on proposed public projects, and their amendments.

To improve our national policies as explained above, for FY13, I have recommended inclusion of public projects and social programs in the annual budget. I also recommend that the projects and programs should be planned for a 3-year period, to avoid repetitive and costly amendments. If this policy is adopted, Congress will be able to plan and analyze any proposed project or program in a more strategic manner by linking it to the Strategic Development Plan (SDP) of the Nation.

With warm personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely,

Manny Mori
President
